MessageMail Business Continuity Solution Incorporates Depositit's Backup Service

When your phone or power lines go down or flooding cuts you off from your office or your computer systems fail for whatever reason you can now continue trading with minimal disruption.

MessageMail, one of the UK's longest established virtual office providers has launched a new Business Continuity service, providing businesses with a backup telephone line fully supported by an experienced team who are at the ready to start taking and distributing calls in the event of an emergency. When disaster strikes the service goes live assuring continuity at work. To complement this service, MessageMail have teamed up with Depositit, the leading provider of computer backup services to provide a complete business backup solution of both data and phone lines.

Depositit Sales Director, Anthony Ryb comments:

"This new partnership between Depositit and MessageMail provides a unique proposition to every business that wants to ensure the least possible downtime in the event of a crisis. Computers crash and get damaged all the time so being able to get your files back quickly is a necessity and the recent flooding and snow has proven that you also need to be able to remain in contact with your customers when these disasters arise.

MessageMail New Business Director, Simon Joseph comments:

"We have been providing telephony and virtual office services for over a decade and were being asked by many existing clients as well as new enquiries about providing a 'spare' phone line for an emergency. We developed the concept and can offer many options for Telephone business continuity as well as also now providing the computer backup service which makes the offer even stronger to our customers.
